Author Biographies

Nicholas James Alcock is currently a student of Philosophy at Calvin College in Grand Rapids, Michigan. His primary interests include aesthetics and Hellenistic philosophy. Apart from philosophy, Nicholas also studies Classics and is a writer of poetry. He is pleased to have his first philosophical essay published with Stance.

Jenna Blake is a senior at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh with a self-defined major in arts, communications, and cultural studies. Her philosophical interests include feminist theory, postcolonial theory, and theories of justice. She particularly likes applying those modes of thought to popular culture and her favorite television shows.

Anna Brinkerhoff is an Alabama native and is currently a junior at Pepperdine University in Malibu, California. Her main interests in philosophy are epistemology, philosophy of religion, and ethics. When she’s not doing philosophy, she enjoys watching college football, baking cupcakes, and drinking good coffee.

Nicholas Brown is currently completing his fourth year of study at St. Mary’s College. He is majoring in both English and Philosophy, and he is working on a cross-disciplinary senior project entitled “The Storied Life: Art as the Practice of Liberation.”
Casey Hladik is a junior Biology major and Philosophy minor in the Science, Humanities, and Medicine Program at Siena College in Loudonville, New York. He will continue in the program at Albany Medical College in 2015. Casey is interested in existentialism, bioethics, and what it means to heal and be a healer.

Liz Jackson is a senior at Kansas State University, and she also has a degree in Bible from a local Christian college. Her most-loved areas of Philosophy are epistemology, metaphysics, and philosophy of religion. She will begin pursuing a PhD in Philosophy this fall. In her free time, she loves to play and watch sports (especially basketball), travel, read, and drink coffee.

Nicholas Logan is originally from Kansas City and is a senior at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee. He will graduate with a double major in Philosophy and Psychology and a minor in English. Aside from his interest in existentialist and post-modern philosophy, Nicholas also enjoys reading and writing short fiction.
Jessa Wood is a first-year student at Bloomsburg University in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania. She is a Philosophy major with minors in Political Science and Spanish. Her philosophical interests include logic, ethics, and political and social philosophy.

Lauren Pass is a junior Philosophy and Medical Anthropology student at the University of Iowa. Her philosophical interests include feminist theories of embodiment, queer theory, and illness narratives. Her life ambitions include going to graduate school for feminist philosophy and raising a small fleet of Welsh corgi puppies.

Betty Stoneman is a Philosophy major and Peace and Justice Studies minor at Utah Valley University. Her main philosophical interests are social and political philosophy, philosophy of religion, philosophy of law, ethics, and feminism. Specifically, she is interested in how ideology shapes social relations and the political ramifications of such. On the side, she is immensely curious about the possibility of finding a Wittgensteinian approach to philosophical pluralism. She enjoys traveling, philosophical debates, reading poetry, watching documentaries, and attending an eclectic array of music events ranging from the symphony to local punk shows.

Jessa Wood is a first-year student at Bloomsburg University in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania. She is a Philosophy major with minors in Political Science and Spanish. Her philosophical interests include logic, ethics, and political and social philosophy.