The Annual Meeting:

The annual meeting of the Association of Deans and Directors of University Colleges and Undergraduate Studies features a lively series of roundtable discussions among deans and directors and members of their staffs from colleges and universities across the United States. These discussions focus on significant issues in undergraduate education, academic advising, academic support services and other issues of concern as suggested in the enclosed program topics survey.

The Association:

The Association of Deans and Directors of University Colleges and Undergraduate Studies is an organization of deans and directors, and their assistants and associates, from colleges or divisions that are enrollment units responsible for advising, as well as other programs and services focusing on the broad academic experiences of undergraduate students. It seeks to establish a community of professional colleagues and arranges meetings to address common problems of higher education as they relate to the mission of our colleges or divisions, to share ideas, to define issues, and to develop solutions.

If your institution is not yet a member of the association, we encourage you to join. The $100.00 initial membership fee is for an institutional membership; there are no memberships for individuals. Annual dues are $25.00 each September following your initial membership. A list of member institutions and an application for membership are enclosed. You need not be a member to attend your first meeting.
