PENDING ICHE APPROVAL

CERTIFICATE IN SOCIAL AND ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE, 12 hours

The mission of the graduate certificate in social and environmental justice, as offered by the Department of Architecture, is to create advanced awareness, understanding, and abilities related to issues of equity as they relate to the design of the built environment. The 12-credit certificate is open to all graduate students of the university and is comprised of three one-credit self-directed classes, seminars in the Department of Architecture, and six credit hours to be identified by the student (in consultation with the graduate program director). It is most appropriate for those who envision career trajectories that feature concerns for social responsibility and environmental awareness.

ARCHITECTURE (ARCH)

New:

407 Fourth World Theory (3) Fourth World Theory examines the physical, political, socio-economical and institutional abandonment of the American Inner-city and investigates the causes which have led to the massive disinvestment. This course attempts to develop a sense of empathy for the citizens who choose or are forced to remain in these often severely distressed environments. Fourth World Theory employs critical inquiry that may better qualify us to be engaged in improving the conditions of our inner cities and of the United States as a whole.

408 Architects of Hope (3) A growing subset of architects situates their talents and passions in the lives of persons occupying exploding equatorial megacities and shrinking inner cities in the Rust Belt. Students will consider a range of issues engaged by the persons who remain in these places. Seminar participants will study as well as interview architects and designers whose practices are centered on those people generally considered to be at-risk or in-need. In response to this investigation, each student will formally define and articulate a more meaningful career trajectory.
