FROM THE DIRECTOR

The David Owsley Museum of Art kicks off the university’s centennial year with the exhibition The Power of Place: 100 Years of Architecture at Ball State University. Co-sponsored by the College of Architecture and Planning (CAP) and the University Libraries, The Power of Place features original plans, blueprints, and digital resources for three signature buildings on campus: the Frank A. Bracken Administration Building (the first university building); the Fine Arts Building (home of the David Owsley Museum of Art); and the Architecture Building (home of Indiana’s first state-supported architectural school). Come and see how these structures developed over the last century, how they are used today, and what the future holds.

Our big fall exhibition Gorey’s Worlds comes to us from the Wadsworth Atheneum Museum of Art in Hartford, Connecticut. Edward Gorey (1925–2000) developed legions of fans for his peculiar, absurd, witty, and always unforgettable imagery with its distinctively Gothic and Victorian sensibility. The exhibition shows not only Gorey’s work but also selections from his personal collection of art, jewelry, and even his famous fur coats that reveal a wonderfully creative character. Anyone interested in illustration, animation, and most of all imagination will adore Gorey’s Worlds!

The Power of Place and Gorey’s Worlds will both open for a public preview during regular museum hours on Thursday, September 27. Then come for the inauguration party on the following evening of Friday, September 28 during DOMA’s signature Final Friday event, which includes PechaKucha talks based on the theme of life. The following Final Friday event on October 26 will feature a Gorey’s Worlds-related theme of death—just in time for your Halloween festivities.

I am particularly excited about other Gorey’s Worlds programming, including a free public presentation by the exhibition’s curator, Erin Monroe, on Thursday, October 11, and new programs for both adults and children, including a Youth Drawing Workshop on November 11 and Strange Gorey Story Time (October 31 and November 18). Also, please don’t miss our regularly scheduled events and programs, such as Meditation in the Museum (most Fridays, now at 3pm) and Docent’s Choice Tours (most Saturdays at 2:30 pm). Kindly refer to the calendar of events for details.

The entire staff at DOMA wishes you a wonderful fall semester and looks forward to seeing you in the galleries!

Peculiar, absurd, mystical, unforgettable: these are the worlds of Edward Gorey (1925 – 2000), the American artist and author. For more than fifty years, he delighted and amused audiences with his spare pen and ink drawings that illustrated tales of hapless children, kohl-eyed swooning maidens, and whimsical creatures. His theatrical work—not least of which was the opening sequence to PBS’s Mystery!—blended the bizarre and the comic with eloquence, ultimately creating fictions that have endured.

Gorey’s Worlds is the first exhibition to explore Gorey’s artistic inspiration and is centered on his personal art collection, bequeathed to the Wadsworth Atheneum, the only public institution to receive his legacy. His collection features a diverse array of 19th and 20th century European and American artists including Eugène Atget, Odilon Redon, Bill Traylor, Charles Burchfield, and others as well as examples of folk art.

Gorey’s imagery and word-play resonate with audiences of all ages and his legacy is international in scope. His gothic sensibility and whimsical humor continue to influence contemporary culture. Among his aesthetic descendants are filmmaker Tim Burton, author Daniel Handler (a.k.a. Lemony Snicket), the rock band Nine Inch Nails, and fashion designer Anna Sui. While his own work has been the subject of exhibitions, Gorey’s Worlds offers a fresh perspective on the artist by inviting visitors to step into Gorey’s imagination and viewing the art he collected alongside his own sketches, drawings, prints, and art books. The exhibition presents a unique opportunity to introduce new audiences to Edward Gorey and for existing Gorey admirers to experience his artistic mindset and the visual ecosystem he created.

The exhibition and its impressive, fully-illustrated catalogue (available for purchase at the exhibition and online) have been enthusiastically reviewed in The Wall Street Journal (twice), The New York Review of Books, Harvard Magazine, and even a rare cartoon review in The New Yorker.

Free public programming related to Gorey’s Worlds at the David Owsley Museum of Art includes a presentation by the exhibition’s curator, Erin Monroe, on Thursday, October 11 at 6pm in the Frank C. and Elizabeth B. Ball Recital Hall, a Death and Dying Art Tour and Discussion led by child and adolescent psychiatrist Dr. Ajanta Goswami, and a Final Friday event with the theme of death on October 26—the week before Halloween. After the holiday, Muncie poets Jeffrey Pearson and Michael Brockley will explore Poetry and the Mystery of Gorey with adults and children age 12 and up on Saturday, November 17. On Saturday, December 8 a Docent’s Choice Tour will focus on the show.

Additional programming specifically for children starts with the Strange Gorey Story Time for upper elementary students and their families on Wednesday, October 31 (Halloween) and again on Sunday, November 18, as well as a Youth Drawing Workshop taught by Prof. Michael Prater on Sunday, November 11 (registration and a modest fee required). Please refer to the Fall 2018 Program Calendar or bsu.edu/doma for details. Unless otherwise noted, the works of Edward Gorey in this exhibition have been provided by the Edward Gorey Charitable Trust.

THE POWER OF PLACE:
100 YEARS OF ARCHITECTURE
AT BALL STATE UNIVERSITY

CURATED BY REBECCA TORSELL, ARCHIVIST FOR ARCHITECTURAL RECORDS, BALL STATE UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES

The centennial anniversary brings to light the power of place in shaping the university environment and the student experience. This exhibition examines the design, materials, and historic context of three key buildings on campus, Administration, Fine Arts, and Architecture. An observer of this exhibit will see that regardless of growth and changes in functions and form to the physical campus that Ball State University has stayed true to its flight path.

The built environment of Ball State University has come a long way since the erection of the first building on campus, the Administration Building (1899). The display of historic images and drawings show a chronological progression of changes to the building, which once served to house and support all the educational components of what was then known as Eastern Indiana Normal University. Architectural drawings bring attention to modifications to the building’s interior spaces, but perhaps what is of greatest interest is its change in function. The building that formerly housed the president’s apartment, library, recital stage, and all classrooms, now exclusively houses university administration offices, including that of the president, provost, and vice presidents. Regardless of alterations to the building to accommodate functional changes, it still retains its place of prominence among Ball State’s campus.

The Fine Arts Building was the twelfth major building constructed at Ball State. It was built to support the education of students in English, art, music, and the social sciences. It is befitting that it now houses the David Owsley Museum of Art, since the building itself is also a work of art, as revealed by its ornate architectural elements—stained-glass windows, slate roof, and inscribed limestone blocks. The inscriptions adorning the east, west, and south entrances are perhaps one of the building’s most interesting elements. Members of the Ball State community, including students, helped to develop the inscriptions with the purpose of inciting thought and imparting meaning to the art, english, music, and social science students that once attended classes in this building.

The Architecture Building embodies the subject matter taught within its walls by way of its building materials and innovative design. In fact, what makes this building unique is that it was designed by way of Indiana’s first statewide design competition for a university building. It is also home to one of the largest architectural archives in the state and not only preserves the built environment of the past but prepares students in landscape and building architecture, planning, construction management, and interior design for careers in these progressive fields.

The exhibition allows visitors to take a walk back in time for a glimpse into the university’s past architectural transformation, which points towards a future of limitless opportunities.
Hired in January 2018, Jordan Huffer is the new staff photographer for the David Owsley Museum of Art. Huffer is a Muncie local, a Ball State University graduate with a degree in journalism, and a life-long photographer as well as avid crafter and creator. She not only captures digital images of works of art using strict color management, but also covers museum events for Facebook and publications like this one.

In just a few months, Huffer has overhauled the DOMA photo studio by cleaning, decluttering, and eliminating unnecessary items to make the space more functional. The most important upgrade, however, was of the studio equipment. The old, multiple strobe lights with large, unruly soft boxes have been replaced by three new, slim design LED lights. These give greater control over both light temperature and intensity, making sure that high-resolution art captures are consistent in color and exposure. Also, a new white Plexiglas-top table replaces a low table that had hard plastic sheeting as a background. The new set up provides for much cleaner photos of artifacts and works of art. The Italian-made table has wheels and is easily moved for flexibly in the space. There is room to move and to photograph larger works, something that was not possible in the past.

Both these minor and major updates are giving a new, fresh life to the studio space. This will, without a doubt, help Huffer more accurately capture and document both new and existing works of art in the collection.

DOMA’S DOCENT PROGRAM

DOMA’s team of 33 docents served as connectors, or a bridge, between the collection and more than 3,100 guided tour participants last year. Docents also promoted DOMA’s exhibitions and educational opportunities at 12 community outreach events on campus and throughout the Muncie community.

This small dedicated team, comprised of both student and community member volunteers, actively supports DOMA’s mission to cultivate lifelong learning and recreation in the visual arts. Our docents come from diverse backgrounds but are unified by shared interests: curiosity, an interest in art and education, and an eagerness to engage diverse visitors of all ages and backgrounds.

During the academic year, docents meet weekly to learn various strategies for engaging museum visitors and also to learn about art in the permanent collection and special exhibitions. “By serving as a DOMA intern and docent, I’ve been able to greatly improve my researching and communication skills, as well as share my love of art and history with many different people,” notes Carli Mandel, a student of history and art history. Bea Sousa, a retired middle school teacher said, “I look forward to the learning challenge each time I plan a new tour.”

New docents are accepted at the beginning of the fall and spring semesters. If you are interested in learning more about the program, contact Cathy Bretz, Education Coordinator, at 765-285-3371 or cabretz@bsu.edu.

ON VIEW

After the flood waters receded, Noah built an altar and sacrificed to God, as recounted in the Old Testament (Genesis 8:20). Noah stands before a burning altar accompanied by his three sons (Shem, Ham, and Japheth) and their three wives. Noah and his daughter-in-law raise their hands in gestures of prayer, while his sons prepare the offerings. The abandoned ark is visible in the background on the upper right.

Maratti is considered the last of the Roman Baroque artists. An advocate of Classicism, he dramatized his compositions with figures in active poses inspired by ancient Greek and Roman statuary as well as live models. The artist's sketchbooks, many of which are preserved in the Real Academia de Bellas Artes de San Ferdinando in Madrid, Spain, contain individual figure studies for Noah and his family.

The Sacrifice of Noah fits into the early part of the artist's career, about the time of his first major public work, an altarpiece of the Nativity (1650). A prolific artist, Maratti painted triumphant altarpieces, monumental frescoes, and expressive portraits for popes and patricians until well past the age of 80. He also served as head of the Accademia di San Luca (the artists' guild) in Rome.
