FROM THE DIRECTOR

This spring, the David Owsley Museum of Art features the blockbuster exhibition, Richard Diebenkorn: Beginnings, 1942–1955. Organized by the Richard Diebenkorn Foundation in collaboration with the Crocker Art Museum in Sacramento, California, the exhibition marks an important milestone for the museum. Since joining Ball State University in 2014, I have believed that DOMA’s historic building and stellar collection rightfully belong to a greater network of significant art museums across the country. It is a privilege and an honor to host an exhibition from the Crocker Art Museum connected to three other important venues: the Portland Art Museum in Oregon; the Frederick R. Weisman Museum of Art at Pepperdine University in Malibu, California; and the Academy Art Museum in Easton, Maryland. This show, and other future exchanges of loans and exhibitions, will help to bring DOMA and Ball State University greater recognition.

Beginnings focuses on the famous California artist’s student days and early career, which are ideal subjects for a university art museum. The 100 works of art on display document the artist’s early experimentation with a variety of influences and successful Abstract Expressionist style before turning towards figuration in the mid-1950s. While of an immediate appeal to students, the museum is also presenting the exhibition to the wider public through a series of events and programs that spark the imagination and tap into local creativity. Please join us for special tours, a free lecture by the exhibition’s curator Dr. Scott Shields, and painting workshops for adults and children.

Speaking of the latter, DOMA continues to engage with local K-12 students as well as other public and private schools in the region. This show, and other future exchanges of loans and exhibitions, will help to bring DOMA and Ball State University greater recognition. This was a monumental effort on the part of the museum education team, and you can read more about it in this issue of ARTwords. School tours, public docent tours, and signature programs like Meditation in the Museum and Final Fridays all play a role in a larger engagement strategy to connect the museum to both the public and the student body. Organizations such as the DOMA Alliance and Friends support this strategy, and we encourage you to invite everyone to join. Art in Bloom 2018, the fundraiser set for Friday evening, May 18 (followed by a free floral exhibition throughout the weekend of May 19–20), is one of many great opportunities to show a friend all that the museum has to offer. As a reminder, those May dates are also the final weekend for the Richard Diebenkorn show, so you and your friends can enjoy both spectacles. I’ll see you in the galleries!

The famous West Coast artist Richard Diebenkorn (1922–1993) is best known as an abstract painter from the San Francisco Bay Area and Los Angeles, California. Yet few realize that the artist developed aspects of his personal style while in the Southwest and Midwest. The exhibition Richard Diebenkorn: Beginnings, 1942–1955 focuses on the initial years of the artist’s career and the David Owsley Museum of Art is its sole Midwestern venue.

Many of the elements that came to define Diebenkorn’s mature work are present in his earliest paintings and drawings, which evolved rapidly from representational landscape scenes and portraits of military colleagues, to semi-abstract and Surrealist-inspired depictions of topography and the human form, to mature Abstract Expressionist paintings that he made while living in California, New Mexico, and Illinois. In 1955, the artist abandoned the nonobjective purity of Abstract Expressionism and, while keeping its painterly language, returned to representational painting. He reversed course yet again in 1967, after moving to Santa Monica, California, where he produced a new, highly acclaimed series of abstract compositions that he called Ocean Park.

The exhibition features 100 paintings and drawings from the Richard Diebenkorn Foundation in Berkeley that illustrate the early phase of Diebenkorn’s career: the Sausalito (California), Albuquerque (New Mexico), Urbana (Illinois), and “early Berkeley” periods of Abstract Expressionism (1947–1955). The display ends with works that suggest the beginning of his second phase, the so-called Berkeley figurative/representational period (1955–1966), which was followed by the third and final portion of the artist’s body of work, the Ocean Park (1967–1987) and Healdsburg (1988–1992) series of abstractions.

Diebenkorn’s beginnings are a particularly appropriate topic for a university art museum. The subject invites current students to examine the artist’s education and results of his youthful experimentation with various styles and media. As a group, the paintings and drawings on display reveal the forces that shaped Diebenkorn as a young artist: the California landscape; his service in the Marines; his teachers and the work of other artists he admired (both those he knew personally and those he did not)—all of which helped him to find his own voice. Though his evolution was rapid by most artists’ standards, he did not, as previous accounts have suggested through the omission of his formative work, suddenly arrive on the scene as an Abstract Expressionist prodigy. His path was as circuitous as it was exceptional and still inspires students, artists, and admirers today.

A beautifully illustrated catalogue accompanies the exhibition and is available for purchase. It includes a scholarly narrative of the artist’s early years by Dr. Scott Shields and reproduces many paintings and drawings—especially the earliest ones—that have not been seen by the public except in the context of the artist’s new catalogue raisonné (some had been unknown to the Richard Diebenkorn Foundation until recently).

Several educational programs and events accompany the exhibition at DOMA. Free public programming includes Music in the Museum on Thursday, February 8, with Dr. James Helton, professor of piano performance in BSU’s School of Music; DOMA’s (Almost) Final Friday program on March 23 features the theme of beginnings; and exhibition curator Dr. Scott Shields will present the Petty Memorial Lecture on Thursday, April 19. Other programs require a small fee and registration, such as the exhibition-related teacher workshop on Saturday, February 3, and two Sunday painting workshops, one for adults on February 11 and another for children on April 8. On Tuesday, March 6, West Coast native artist and Distinguished Professor Emerita Patricia Nelson hosts a Lunch and Learn program about Richard Diebenkorn, followed on Wednesday, March 28, with a lecture on mid-twentieth-century art by Peg Koetsch, Distance Learning Coordinator for the Smithsonian American Art Museum. Please consult the museum calendar and bsu.edu/doma for registration and costs.

DOMA’S SMART PROGRAM WITH MUNCIE COMMUNITY SCHOOLS ENABLES ART MUSEUM AND CAMPUS VISITS

Last fall, DOMA launched a new program for over 400 Muncie Community Schools fourth graders from all six elementary schools funded by the Ball Brothers Foundation. The School Museum Art Readiness Tours (SMART) emphasize Indiana art with social studies and language arts connections, using a specially developed interactive tour and pre- and post-visit classroom activities.

“The SMART program partnership has offered an awesome opportunity for Muncie Community Schools fourth grades to visit and experience the fabulous David Owsley Museum of Art,” said Dr. Dea Moore-Young, director of elementary education, Muncie Community Schools. “The standards-based tours provide a fine arts connection to language arts, social studies, and visual arts for our students. In addition to the academic and cultural experiences, students learned about artists from Indiana and were able to see and experience the beautiful campus of Ball State University.”

Preliminary data shows that before experiencing SMART, 77% of Muncie Community Schools fourth graders had not visited DOMA and 54% of them had not visited any art museum.

“The Museum’s SMART program for all of the MCS fourth graders was an excellent way to introduce the students to a meaningful understanding of ‘another world’!” said Nancy Swickard, West View Elementary School’s art teacher. “After taking a poll, I discovered that the students who said they had visited an art museum thought we were talking about a children’s museum! Clearly the gasps that we heard when entering the doors were signs that they were in a totally new, amazing place!”

DOMA docents were trained specifically to lead the special tours and incorporate the Indiana teaching standards. “The students were engaged 110% with the docents who introduced them to a fascinating, in-depth way to view art, encouraging them to describe what they were seeing, and logical thinking. They clearly enjoyed drawing fanciful teapots based on the ones in the collection too,” Ms. Swickard noted.

Art teacher Natalie McKalip from Longfellow Elementary School said, “Thanks for supporting the art department and building a stronger community connection. The SMART program has made a huge impact! It has changed how the fourth grade students view the museum, artwork, and their own creativity.”

In December, all Muncie Community Schools fourth grade students and their families were invited to a special SMART celebration in collaboration with the Back to School Teachers Store. This spring, other Delaware County schools will be invited to participate in the SMART program. Financial assistance for transportation will be available through a grant from the Muncie Art Students’ League.

Considering the astonishing fact that the David Owsley Museum of Art collection includes more than 11,000 original works of art—a number that grows each month—the incredible role of providing for the care, preservation, safety, documentation, movement, storage, and accessibility of the museum’s artworks and associated records is critical. This past October, DOMA was very fortunate to hire Denise Mahoney as the new Registrar and Collection Manager to tackle these tasks and more.

Denise is quickly becoming familiar with DOMA’s storage challenges, several recent acquisitions requiring attention, and EmbARK, the museum’s new hosted collection management system. “A main goal of mine is to make this wonderful collection accessible online in a way that is useful for scholars, students, and the general public. Much work is needed behind the scenes to edit and update the data, but I am definitely up for the challenge.”

Before coming to DOMA, Denise was the Collection and Exhibition Manager for the Department of American Art at the Art Institute of Chicago. While there, she managed several exhibitions and was a contributing author to books such as The Age of American Impressionism: Masterpieces from the Art Institute of Chicago (2011) and American Modernism at the Art Institute of Chicago (2009). Denise received a BFA in Art History from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and an MA in Modern Art History, Theory, and Criticism from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

DOMA: SMALL STAFF, LARGE TEAM

For many of us, a campus job in college was an initial foray into gaining professional experience. Also for many of us, the opportunity to provide such an experience to students today is a rewarding aspect of working at a university museum. Those experiences intersect at DOMA in a myriad of ways and with much benefit on all sides.

If you have visited DOMA recently, the first and last sight you most likely encountered was the smiling face of one of our Visitor Assistants. DOMA relies upon more than 25 student employees each semester to fill this role, with responsibilities ranging from upholding the safety and security of our galleries, answering questions and being available to guests, and monitoring the climate and any changes in gallery or object condition throughout the day. These students study in all disciplines—from art history to criminal justice to telecommunications—and will use their DOMA experience in various fields after graduating. “I love working at DOMA!” says senior Alexus Foreman. “Working here made me excited to change my major to art history and has pushed my interest in museum studies.”

DOMA also employs several interns, student assistants, and graduate assistants to work behind the scenes on social media and marketing, collection management, educational programming, curatorial research, exhibition preparation, and much more. Senior Telecommunications and History major Ryan Shank completed not one but two internships with DOMA. He says, “I had the opportunity as a media intern to work closely on the SHIFT exhibition with the visiting curator. That experience sparked an interest in knowing more about curating, and the following semester I applied for a curatorial internship, working closely with Director La France and gaining experience with historical research.”

DOMA truly could not serve our guests nor maintain our collection without the dedicated contributions from our student team. In turn, the full-time staff works hard to provide these students with impactful, professional experience that will enrich their resumes, their careers, and their lifelong appreciation of the arts. Director of Education Tania Said adds, “many excellent students have worked at DOMA and go on to museum careers and become museum supporters. Hearing how DOMA continues to influence and inform what they do is very rewarding.”

New to the Collection

DEFIANCE

The dramatic image is a visual interpretation of Dmitri Shostakovich’s Symphony No. 7 in C major, Opus 60, titled Leningrad. Like the symphony, the painting expresses the Russian people’s defiance of Nazi totalitarianism during the Siege of Leningrad in the U.S.S.R (now St. Petersburg, Russia). The siege lasted from September 8, 1941 to January 27, 1944.

Jewish-American artist William Gropper painted in the Social Realist style. His canvas extolls the spirit of the besieged Soviet workers, represented here by the red-shirted, blond-haired man brandishing a pitchfork. This painting once belonged to a collection visualizing significant musical compositions assembled by the now defunct Farnsworth Radio and Television Company of Fort Wayne, Indiana.
