

Trevor Campbell is a practicing artist and high school art educator from Fort Wayne, IN. He graduated from Ball State University (2016) with a degree in Visual Arts Education and a minor in Art History. He has taught visual arts for nine years, and currently serves as Canterbury School's Director of Visual Arts and High School Dean of Student Affairs. He values building relationships, humor, and student autonomy and choice in the art classroom. He was awarded the Teacher Service Award in 2021, and named a Scholastic Outstanding Arts Educator in 2022. As a practicing artist, he has exhibited work all over Indiana, Virginia, and Missouri. Most recently, he led and curated a group exhibition at ArtLink Contemporary Gallery in Fort Wayne titled "Influences: The Connection Between Educator and Student," where he and other regional arts educators displayed personal artwork alongside their students' work, highlighting the impact students have on educator's art practices. In 2023 he was featured on PBS's "arts IN focus" series, was an Arts United Award Nominee, and received a Teacher Creativity Fellowship for his proposal, "Mimesis of Migrations: Following and Drawing Great Alaskan Migrations." Trevor and his wife, Grace, met in Dehority on Ball State's Campus their freshmen year, and were married in 2021. They live in downtown Fort Wayne with their three dogs - Scout, Moose and Penny.
