TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Associate Lecturer of Communication Studies at Ball State University, Fall 2019 - present

Assistant Lecturer of Communication Studies at Ball State University, Fall 2011- Fall 2019:

Fundamentals of Public Communication (COMM 210)

Principles and practice of effective oral communication; analysis and evaluation of the speaking-listening process; preparation in message construction, emphasizing the selection, organization, and delivery of materials.

Exploration of Communication Studies (COMM 201)

An introduction to the study of communication for students new to the field. Provides guidelines for being a beginning communication student and scholar.

Business and Professional Communication (COMM 251)

Explores a variety of communication issues in business and professional contexts, including gender, diversity, co-worker relationships, interviewing, group and team skills, leadership, and nonverbal communication. Also emphasizes written communication and oral presentation skills appropriate to business.

Communication and Technology (COMM 315)

Explores how technology influences communication in interpersonal relationships, organizational life, and other contemporary contexts. Using theory and research, students will discuss factors that influence the adoption, use, and subsequent outcomes associated with the introduction of new communication technology.

Interviewing (COMM 325)

Examines the principles and types of interviews, with application of the principles in informational, persuasive, and employment interviews. Special attention is given to the various communication facets of the employment interview process: resumes, cover letters, selection interviews, and appraisal interviews.

Small Group Communication (COMM 330)

Focuses on the theories, concepts, and processes of small group communication, decision-making, and problem solving.

Leadership Communication (COMM 340)

Introduces students to classic and contemporary leadership theories, with an emphasis on the central role of leadership communication.

Communication Studies Senior Seminar (COMM 401)

Designed to assist senior communication studies majors with their transition from the academy to the professional world. Students will participate in assessment and explore career opportunities.

Interpersonal Communication (COMM 440)

Examines contemporary theories, concepts, models, and pertinent research related to the communication process in interpersonal relationships to understand message exchanges and how they affect the people involved. Introduces the approaches, variables, and topics that influence social interaction.

Writing Proficiency Course (WPP 393)

Replaces WPP 392 (the university-required Writing Proficiency Examination). Required of all students who have not completed WPP 392 after two attempts, but is open to other students by permission. Offered on a credit/no credit basis, credit hours do not count toward graduation requirements.

Teaching experience before faculty position:

Intercultural Communication (COMM 290)

Critical survey of major concepts in cross-cultural and intercultural interaction. Examines the effects of customs, behaviors, and values on the interpersonal communication process. (Ball State University, teaching assistant, 2 sections of 105 students, 2007-2008)

Introduction to Human Communication. (COMM 240)

Focuses on understanding interpersonal communication as a dynamic and complex system of interactions rather than on the skills of platform speaking. Stresses the importance of understanding and applying communication theory in everyday communication situations. (Ball State University, teaching assistant, 1 section of 105 students, 2007)

Speech Team Immersive Project- member

Instructed Muncie Burris 8th grade speech class once a week and organized speech competition, Ball State University, 2009.
