Opportunities and Challenges Facing Mentors in a Time of Change

Mentoring relationships have long been seen as a critical mechanism to support both mentors and mentees. Each member of the mentoring relationship benefits from the career experience and emotional support that accompanies committed mentoring relationships. Through this workshop, Dr. Blake-Beard will focus on the mentor’s experience of building and maintaining these critical developmental relationships. Attendees will have the opportunity to deepen their understanding of mentoring through this workshop by thinking about the adapting parameters of mentoring given the challenges we currently face.

Dr. Blake-Beard is a Professor of Management at Simmons College’s School of Business, where she teaches organizational behavior and researches mentoring, gender, and diversity. Prior to joining Simmons, Dr. Blake-Beard was faculty at the Harvard University Graduate School of Education. Dr. Blake-Beard has been affiliated with the advisory board and research groups of a number of organizations, including the Harvard Medical School Center for the Study of Diversity in Science, MentorNet, Teen Voices, the Harvard Project on Tenure, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Vanderbilt AGEP External Advisory Board, Women of Color in the Academy, and Northeastern University’s Sloan Grant for URM Faculty in STEM Leadership Program.
