CASE STUDY[1]

SPECIAL DELIVERY

Selma and Theo are high school sweethearts. After college, they got married and couldn't wait to start a family. So when they discovered that Selma was pregnant with twins they were over the moon with excitement.

At a check-up with the doctor, they learned about some complications that were putting the babies and Selma in danger. She was rushed to the hospital for further testing – eventually, being admitted. She had to remain on bed rest in the hospital for several weeks until the babies were born – healthy and happy. While this wasn't the birth experience they'd planned, Selma and Theo weren't concerned with the bills because they had Hospital Indemnity insurance.

Medical insurance only picked up some of the costs for Selma's hospital stay. That meant that Selma and Theo were on the hook for out-of-pocket expenses. Their Hospital Indemnity insurance helped them cover bills like their groceries, rent and many, many boxes of diapers.
