UNITED ARAB EMIRATES: POWER TO THE YOUTH

Today, social media connects our world. It is a social norm to have access to the internet or a cell phone leading to pertinent links between individuals and communities. This connectedness seems to be most prominent in the younger generations of society and is exemplified by the works of Shamma Al Mazrui. Using the power of social media, Mazrui has bridged the generational gap between law-makers and their constituents, in her position in the government of the United Arab Emirates (UAE).

In 2016, Shamma Al Mazrui was appointed to the position of Minister of State for Youth Affairs in the UAE by Prime Minister Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum. At 22 years, she is the youngest member in a cabinet where the average age is 30, and the youngest government minister in the world. She was appointed to her current position after Al Maktoum tweeted asking the UAE's universities to nominate a young person for the role. As UAE's first Rhodes scholar at the University of Oxford with passionate political views, the choice to appoint Mazrui was clear. She is one of eight women in the twenty-nine-member cabinet and has made it her goal to create pathways for young people to have more engagement with government and within society. This increase in the involvement of the youth has been valuable to the progression of the Emirati nation, and Al Maktoum's work has reached innumerable community members through social connections and media usage.

"I am only now starting to embark on my journey... and yes, it is a huge responsibility on these young shoulders, but it also shows that every one of our young men and women can afford to have dreams that touch the sky. That our ambition knows no limits." said Shamma bint Suhail Faris Mazrui (Emirates News Agency, 2016).

Al Mazrui has included the youth in the process of Emirati governance and policy in multiple ways. First, she established the National Youth Council, which brings together young community members from a variety of backgrounds to represent the affairs of youth to the government. The goal of this council is to allow the youth of the UAE to voice the ways they believe social justice can be made possible. In gaining this new perspective, the UAE has been able to make strong progress for the sake of peace in their community. Second, she established "youth circles," which allow young people to participate in meetings that research global issues pertinent to society today, including climate change and education. In doing so, Mazrui's initiatives are providing a platform for communication between the government and young people. Acting as a representative of the issues and aspirations of their own generation, Mazrui and her team's voices are growing stronger in the global political conversation. Lastly, Mazrui actively speaks about the role of the youth in the Middle East at international events, which allows the voice of Emirati youth to be heard.

Mazrui's work in reaching out to society members on social media outlets illustrates the ever-changing ways in which we can connect and communicate with each other. Her policy changes are peaceful as well as inclusive. If we were to replicate the methods that Mazrui is using in the United States, we may be able to increase the influence that young people have in our society. We have already seen an application of Mazrui's social media tactics in the U.S., but we still need more youthful members in the federal government cabinet to positively influence policy making.

TOGETHER FOR ALL: PEACEFUL EFFORTS IN TIMES OF CLIMATE CHANGE

In a world with increasing temperatures and melting glaciers, one cannot help but wonder if the recent catastrophic weather events are a byproduct of climate change. Domestically, Hurricane Florence devastated the states of North and South Carolina, and Virginia, while Hurricane Michael struck Florida. Internationally, the Sulawesi earthquake and tsunami ravaged Indonesia. Even though these events left catastrophe behind, they also brought nations, communities, and organizations together in an act of solidarity to provide for those in need.

Hurricane Florence made landfall in the Carolinas on September 14th and left behind a death toll of 53 people and an estimated property damage of $38 billion. Despite the havoc Florence caused, nations and organizations were quick to respond. 40,000 workers from across the United States and Canada went to the Carolinas to restore power. Additionally, the Federal Emergency Management Agency mobilized its forces with other departmental agencies including the Interior Department to send rescue teams to heavily flooded areas. Relief efforts poured in from organizations including the Lilly Foundation, which pledged to match each dollar donation given to the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army. Although somewhat less impactful than Florence, Hurricane Michael landed in Florida on October 7th, and caused property damage of $6.1 billion and a death toll of 36 people. Rapid response, however, was seen in the form of relief from various agencies charged with restoring power and providing temporary housing and meals for the people affected.

Overall, when disaster strikes, as was the case with Florence and Michael, it can be difficult to find reprieve. However, the support provided by community members, and national organizations served to highlight the importance of rapid mobilization and community assistance—demonstrating the power of the collective as people from various backgrounds came together for the same purpose.

Internationally, on September 28th, a deadly tsunami devastated the eastern Sulawesi island in Indonesia, leaving 1600 people dead, and many more displaced. Although the tsunami took Indonesia by surprise, the response from the international community is notable. Apart from hefty monetary donations from the United States and the United Kingdom, assistance has also poured in through other means. Other countries contributed shelter kits, medical equipment, medical teams, and solar lanterns, while India launched Operation Samudra Maitri (extending friendship through the sea) sending aircraft and naval ships with relief materials.

Overall, it appeared that in situations of adversity caused by natural disasters, nations, organizations, and communities came together in an act of solidarity. Their efforts attempted to bring peace to regions wrecked by natural disasters, by helping in terms of monetary donations, skills, and medical aid. There is no doubt that without their assistance, the disastrous effects of these tragedies would have been felt for an extended period.

Such acts of helping remind us that unity in adversity is truly an important aspect of demonstrating humanness. Although, the organizations, nations, and communities offering assistance may have differed extensively, they were able to combine their strengths to support communities in distress; highlighting the importance of bridging differences to aid reconstruction efforts and mitigate loss. By displaying selflessness and aiding their neighbors near and far away, they contributed to bringing peace to areas of unrest, while working towards building a culture of support and care.

INDY FESTIVAL OF FAITHS 2018

The Center for Interfaith Cooperation (CIC) held their 6th annual Festival of Faiths in downtown Indianapolis on October 14th. Notably, the Center for Peace and Conflict Studies partnered with this festival and participated in the celebrations with the presence of our Traveling Peace Pole. The festival was designed to recognize, highlight, and celebrate the diverse religious landscape in Central Indiana. A primary goal of the festival was to heighten awareness about the many religious congregations that coexist in Central Indiana and to provide an opportunity to share and learn about each other's traditions in an open and public setting.

The festival was first celebrated in the fall of 2013 and has steadily grown each year. Since the formation of the CIC in 2011, the organization has built up a large, robust, and diverse network of partnerships with Central Indiana congregations, colleges, and universities, and civic and community organizations. One of its most important assets in fulfilling this mission is CIC's diverse and active board, consisting of forty religious and community leaders.

This year's festival theme was "Compassion Through Action," and brought together three dozen groups and congregations as the Midwest's largest one-day celebration of religious diversity and vitality. The Center for Peace and Conflict Studies displayed its traveling peace pole, created in 2017 for our event entitled, "Build Peace." The peace pole offers individuals a chance to share their concept of peace on a colorful paper circle, thereby forming a visual reminder of the diversity and commitment to peace embraced by members of Ball State University and now persons in Central Indiana. The peace pole also serves to commemorate persons who lost their lives in April because of violent tragedies.

The Festival of Faiths was a remarkable sight because it provided a forum for individuals from numerous faiths to assemble. This is especially notable given the normative heterogeneity in the Midwest, a point made by several religious group leaders during the welcoming ceremony. All the displays and activities at the Festival were a call to learn how to coexist with people of various walks of life, religions included, and a call to figure out how to pursue peace through understanding and cooperation. The Festival facilitated a beautiful collection of cultures and encouraged its participants to view each other as fellow human beings, despite potential differences. We were grateful for the opportunity to participate in an event where people from all backgrounds could come together to celebrate life, each other, our unique differences, and the promise of a more peaceful future.

END ZONE RED ZONE

One in four female students report being sexually assaulted during their time at college according to the Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network. Additionally, more than 50% of college sexual assaults occur from August to November in any given year. During this time, the first six weeks of the fall semester has an exceptionally high number of assault incidents; a phenomenon called the “Red Zone.” Students and organizations in college campuses across the United States have been hard at work to raise awareness of this issue and make resources available in case of sexual assault. For our Peace Center’s October event, we collaborated with other campus organizations to raise awareness about the issue of sexual assault.

On October 24th, the Center for Peace and Conflict Studies co-hosted “End Zone Red Zone” with Step In Speak Up, the Student Government Association, and the Resident Halls Association. This event aimed to spread awareness about sexual assaults on campus and the existence of the dangerous Red Zone period. The potential reasons that the number of incidents happen during this period could be increased alcohol consumption at the beginning of semesters, students’ guards are down as they look to make friends, and there is more time to socialize. Ball State University offers many resources for students who have experienced sexual assault. These resources include the Office of Health, Alcohol, and Drug Education, the Office of Victim Services, and the Step In Speak Up student organization.

End Zone Red Zone aimed to bring BSU students together and to explore the subject of sexual assault in a relaxed environment. As a part of the event, students gathered to play yard games, had a chance to win Step In Speak Up merchandise, and enjoyed a safe space to talk about issues related to sexual assault. Information about sexual assault and resources were available to all participants as well. Overall, we are grateful to have been able to participate in this event and we aim to continue to raise awareness about the problem of sexual assault, especially on college campuses.

ON AND OFF CAMPUS EVENTS CONTINUED

Monday, November 5

Crowdfunding Basics for Your Neighborhood - 5:30 PM

Crowdfunding platforms such as Go Fund Me, Kickstarter, and Patroncity offer unique opportunities to raise funds for individual and neighborhoods. This November 5th training will continue a monthly series hosted by Muncie Action Plan, Ball State's Building Better Neighborhoods program, Shafer Leadership Academy, and the Bowen Center for Public Affairs. In this session, they plan to review the basics of these platforms along with fundamental strategies for implementation. The events are free and open to anyone who wants to take an active role in their community.
