PREAMBLE

Ball State University is committed to all faculty that aspire to teach and prepare the next generation of the workforce. Ball State University faculty are currently designated in the Faculty and Professional Handbook as Regular, Contract, Lecturer, Lecturer Emeritus, Visiting, Adjunct, Endowed Chair, and Distinguished. We will demonstrate below that these some of names do not properly reflect the nature of the relationship of the faculty with Ball State. In particular, using the term “regular” to describe faculty on the tenure-line implies that the other faculty in the list are “irregular” in some fashion.

Many contract faculty are specialized in specific areas within the university and it is common for contract faculty to work at Ball State University for many years. Therefore, the name “contract” does not fully describe the range of responsibilities of these faculty members nor reflect the often “non-temporary” nature of their employment with the university. Some data that support this contention include:

- in the 2015-2016 academic year, Ball State employed 1,017 faculty with 351 being talented and committed contract faculty.
- Forty percent (40%) of Ball State University’s contract faculty have worked for the university for seven (7) or more years; nine percent (9%) have dedicated 20 plus years of service.

We propose that the designations of the types of “regular” and “contract” faculty in the Faculty and Professional Handbook be changed to “tenure-line” faculty and “non-tenure-line” faculty to better reflect the characteristics of the relationship of non-tenure-line faculty to the Ball State community.

FACULTY DESIGNATION CHANGE RECOMMENDATION

First, the designation of “regular” faculty shall be changed in the Faculty and Professional Handbook to “tenure-line” faculty. This will better describe the group of faculty covered by this designation. It will also eliminate the implication that other faculty at Ball State are irregular. Second, the designation of “contract” faculty shall be changed in the Faculty and Professional Handbook to “non-tenure-line” faculty. Third, the remaining faculty designations in the handbook will remain unchanged as they currently do a reasonable job in describing the faculty in these positions.
We have provided an edited section of the current Faculty and Professional Handbook below to illustrate what we have in mind.
