

Owen Espinosa is a performer and writer who hails from Chicago, IL. He is currently a senior Musical Theatre major earning his BFA at Ball State University! Owen feels very fortunate to be surrounded by family and friends who have constantly supported him and have influenced the art he wants to put out into the world.

In addition to studying at Ball State, Owen was also selected to be part of the 2024 Theatremaker cohort at the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center where he got to write and perform his own new work each week for colleagues and industry professionals. During this time he also took part in world-class conferences in playwriting, musical theatre performance and puppetry which has made a profound impact on the way that he believes theatre can be performed and used as an accessible tool to challenge our world and our minds as storytellers.

When not performing or writing, Owen can be found puzzling, cooking, reading, laser tagging, writing Letterboxd reviews, petting his dogs or enjoying the outdoors. Owen is interested in taking his multitude of passions both within the industry and broadly outside it to make art that reflects both the ever changing world around us and the action he wants to take towards progress and change for a brighter future!
